St Mary's Students' Union Host Twickenham Constituency Hustings

The Students' Union at St Mary's University, Twickenham (SMSU) hosted a Hustings for candidates in the Twickenham Constituency in the 2017 General Election.

The event, chaired by SMSU President Zander Lavall, brought together defending MP Dr Tania Mathias (Conservative), previous MP Rt Hon Sir Vince Cable (Liberal Democrat), and Dr Katherine Dunne (Labour), for the first of seven Hustings in the constituency.

The Candidates were invited to deliver an introductory manifesto speech before facing questions from the floor. Students from St Mary's asked tough questions on a range of topics affecting them including the future of the NHS, how Brexit will impact on borders, the ethics of tuition fees, St Mary's Masterplan consultation, and their role in the local community.

Speaking after the event Zander Lavall said, "I was thrilled to be able to welcome our local constituency candidates to speak to and answer questions from our students. Twickenham is one of the most interesting seats in this election and with over 6000 potential voters on campus, this Hustings gave candidates a great opportunity to inspire students to vote and explain why they are the best candidate to represent student interests."

At the end of the Hustings a snap poll found that the Liberal Democrats won the Hustings, with Labour in a close second and the Conservatives in third place.

PART 23 – THE RISING SUN PUB IN EAST TWICKENHAM

By Alan Winter

This week we move to a pub with a long but recently unsettled history. The postcard shows the Rising Sun pub over 110 years ago posted in 1905. It originally opened in 1841. During the last war my grandfather who was a fire watch warden was stationed on the roof of the pub when on duty. In the 1960's a function room in the very large garden was used for disco's and local club awards evenings etc. Virtually all of that lovely garden and the function room are now lost in the mists of time as development has sadly encroached.

In the last 10 years or so it has been all change at the Rising Sun. It was acquired by Sainsburys from Youngs brewery but fortunately the pub survived as it carries a change of use restriction. Sainsburys put it back on the market and since then it has been called The Marble Hill, The Aleksander and now the Alba in quick succession. I hate this modern fashion of taking over pubs and re-naming them with a supposedly clever name. It rarely works and as pubs are a key building block of every community it should not be allowable to change their original name. I am right aren't I? We welcome your views so please write to the letters page.

The pub predates St Stephens Church on the other side of the road which opened in 1875. The postcard shows the original turret and spire to the right. There are various stories as to why and when the spire disappeared. Can you help clarify it?

The last of the elements on the postcard is the lovely old Number 296 tram wending its way from Richmond Bridge towards Twickenham. One postcard but a lot of history.

TwickerSeal - Talks to Nicola Sturgeon

Nessie recently visited Twickenham and on his return to Scotland he bumped into Nicola Sturgeon. Nessie told Nicola about his time in Twickenham and seeing an opportunity she rushed down.

So Nicola, what brings you to the fair shores of Twickenham?

Well, I bumped into Nessie and he told me about his visit here. When he told me about the merger I thought och no, you can't let the elite of Westminster, sorry I mean Wandsworth, control you! It is time for Twickenham's independence. It's bad enough being controlled by Richmond!

The wee village of Saint-Bris-le-Vineux

By Mike Matthews

In the annals of Burgundian wine production, the small commune of Saint-Bris-le-Vineux is somewhat unique! Why, I imagine you asking? Well, it is the only Appellation in Burgundy that can commercially produce Sauvignon Blanc!

It is tiny. It's a wee speck on the grand scheme of things, roughly 361 vine growing acres. Nevertheless, it is there!

Drive 20 minutes up the road and you will find yourself sauntering into Chablis, Chardonnay country. Turn around and canter along the E60/A6 motorway, south east out of Saint-Bris and you are in to the main body of Burgundy, again, Chardonnay country.

This little gem of a commune can produce wines that match anything from noted neighbouring Loire towns, like Sancerre, Pouilly Fumé and Touraine.

The wines here can also offer welcome relief from the generic tropical fruit bombed based Kiwi style Sauvignon Blanc's that have dominated supermarket shelves over recent years. Don't get me wrong! I love a good Kiwi Sauvignon Blanc, such as Bishop's Leap from Marlborough where this has a more Gallic feel than New World, but for me there has been an all too familiar style flooding our shelves that do the rest of New Zealand no favours at all.

The Sauvignon's from Saint-Bris are of a cooler climate. They have the capacity to be crisp with refreshing acidity around the palate, drawing up minerals from the chalky soil around. Other characteristics from Saint-Bris wines are, what we describe as, green and herbaceous with light lemon citrus fruit.

For a small wine producing region the wines don't break the bank either. So, if you are out and about and you see a French wine from Saint-Bris, and it will be labelled as such, give it a go. You might be surprised!

If I've piqued your interest then why not give these a try and compare the regions -

- Domaine Felix & Fils Saint-Bris 2015, Saint-Bris-le-Vineux – France: £11.79. Currently available to taste in our Enomatic tasting machine.
- Domaine Guy Allion Sauvignon 2015, Touraine, Loire – France: £10.49
- Bishop's Leap Sauvignon Blanc 2015, Marlborough – New Zealand: £12.49

All prices correct at publishing. Subject to change and availability. 10% off mixed cases of 6.

A Modern English Myth with Heart Jerusalem

By Jez Butterworth

Teddington Theatre Club
at Hampton Hill Theatre until 20th May Review by Melissa Syversen

I am just going to acknowledge the elephant in the room. The original production of Jez Butterworth's Jerusalem back in 2009 was such stuff as theatre legends are made of. It premiered the Royal Court Theatre to critical acclaim and subsequently transferred to the West End, to Broadway and back. It starred acting royalty Sir Mark Rylance, who won every acting award imaginable including a Tony and an Olivier for his portrayal of Johnny 'Rooster' Byron. Playwright David Hare has claimed it is the last successful 'State of England' play of the proud English theatre tradition. So, you know, no pressure.

Ok, now let's shoo the elephant on its way.

It is St. George's day in the imaginary village of Flintock, Wiltshire. The local county fair is on, with its wet sponge throwing and Morris dancers dancing. Through the air, we hear songs and laughter coming from the village square and into the forest clearing where local gypsy and former daredevil Johnny 'Rooster' Byron lives in his caravan. Rooster is a highly sought-after man. The local council wants him out, having given him his final eviction notice to be gone by the end of the day. The local youths want access to his wide supply of drugs, alcohol and tall tales. His son wants to spend the day with him and a local thug wants to know where his missing step-daughter is.

The role of Rooster is the kind any actor would kill for. Rooster encapsulates the subversive spirit of England. He is both old and new, local legend and outcast, delving in the edge of society. He has an unmatched spirit of life but a darkness beyond what can fully be put into words. This duality is what writer Jez Butterworth excels at capturing so vividly throughout his body of work. He has an unmatched ability to blend social commentary, personality with something larger and mythical: a sense of spiritual folklore that gets under one's skin. It is easy to laugh when Rooster tells a story of how he one morning met a giant who claims to have built Stonehenge, and yet one is left with an unsettling feeling that it might just be true

Turing House School fiasco continues

A serious problem is now facing Turing House School in finding a permanent site is the clear message that is being sent to all parliamentary candidates standing in Twickenham.

Vince Cable, Liberal Democrat parliamentary candidate and the MP for Twickenham between 1997 and 2015, commenting on the latest developments said:

“The Education and Skills Funding Agency, which has the job of finding sites and premises for Free Schools, has now admitted it has made little or no progress in the last year in acquiring from Hounslow Council the Hospital Bridge Road site in Whitton preferred by the Conservative leadership of Richmond Council.

“Following this admission I urge Richmond Council to make available instead the Fulwell site that they own adjacent to the David Lloyd sports facility in Uxbridge Road.

“This has always been the site preferred by local Liberal Democrat Councillors and is of course much closer to where the most of the current and future pupils of Turing House School actually live. The Conservative majority on Richmond Council opposed a Liberal Democrat attempt to make the Fulwell site as the preferred option, but it has never given convincing reasons for preferring the Whitton site.

“If it cannot urgently unlock the unexplained jam holding up its acquisition it needs to release the alternative at Fulwell without further delay. The future of this excellent school should not be left uncertain any longer.

“Both the Whitton and Fulwell sites are Metropolitan Open Land and the “very special circumstances” argument required to justify planning permission is the same in either case.”

“The parents and children who will benefit from Turing House School have already faced enough problems. It is time this fiasco came to an end.”

Footloose and Fancy Free - Footloose the Musical

Richmond Theatre until 20th May

Review by Georgia Renwick

Oh, to be footloose and fancy free! Footloose the Musical, which is appearing at Richmond Theatre this week as part of a UK tour, is a slice of life in Southern-State 1980s America. Bursting with vivacious songs and energetic, aerobic dance moves, whilst also bristling with teenage angst and rebellion.

It tells the story of teenager Ren and his mother, who have moved to the fictional town of Bomont where dancing, liquor and rock and roll have been banned - but they don't let that stop them! It is a rip-roaring retro blast of 80s nostalgia; denim cut offs, pom-poms, milkshakes, roller skates, baseball caps and good ol' rock 'n' roll all make an appearance, but then some things never go out of style! And Footloose still has the recipe for a foot-stomping, fun night out.

The original 1984 movie was loosely based on events that took place in the small, rural town of Elmore, Oklahoma - and if you have seen the 1984 movie (or the 2011 reboot) you may be thinking you've seen it all before - but you would be wrong. This revival takes the 1998 screen-to-stage musical version, which featured new songs as well as the hit title track Footloose and other big 80s hitters including Holding out for a Hero and I'm Free, and gives it a kick for a new generation. The newly remixed songs (under the direction of David Keech) are played with panache by the incredibly talented multi-instrumentalist actors, including, besides the usual keys and guitars, a flute, clarinet, harmonica, three saxophones with the drummer conducting it all from his drum cage on high. Having the musicians perform on stage for us brings a freshness and playfulness to the sometimes synthetic musical style. Lauren Storer silences the town council with her flute, seeing the strict town pastor give a solo on the electric guitar is a special moment, and there's even a credible rap.

The addition of instruments has the ensemble cast gelling in a collaborative water-tight way that is rarely seen, and it's a joy to watch. The vocal talents of the girls are given the freedom to really shine, belting in faultless harmony. They may not have as large a chorus to play with as some of the larger West End musicals, but their pace and energy more than make up for it. It never sounds too thin. Designer Sarah Perks has also done a fantastic job of creating a compact set that encompasses the organised chaos of a instrumentalist-actor company, who are able to move about slickly. The neon lights flash to the pulse of the show, it's a real party atmosphere!

Joshua Downen and Hannah Price lead the cast as Ren (made famous by Kevin Bacon) and Ariel, their chemistry as a pairing is very natural and heats up as the show goes on, as a surprising amount of emotional depth comes into play. Gareth Gates puts paid to the pop star cliché of playing the romantic lead by taking on the comedy role of Ren's friend Willard. With his deep-south accent, straw hat, dungarees and toothpick he was almost unrecognisable from the gawky Pop Idol I remember and he proves in this production he is more than just a famous face with the cheekiness, charm and excellent comic timing he lends to his role. His cameo in Holding Out for a Hero also showed off some other new ... ahem ... assets.

It was a pleasure to see Maureen Nolan as mother to Ariel and school principal, after her many years in both the West End and touring productions of Blood Brothers. Her throaty vocal is the most passionate of the production, a credit to a show which gives voice not only to the younger generation but also to the feelings of their parents, caught between trying to protect their children and wanting them to be happy.

Footloose tells a story of young people kicking up against the rules and making themselves heard, which teens of any generation can relate to but at present more than most. The presence of Trump in the American and indeed world consciousness is unavoidable, and by the young people, largely unwanted. (Statistical aside: If just the votes of 18-25 year olds had counted, 93% of electoral votes would have been Democrat blue. Here in the UK at the minute it is a similar story. If just the votes of our 18-25 year old's had been counted in the referendum - out of a 63% youth turnout - we would have remained in the EU.) In Footloose the pastor has to concede that his fears cannot hold back an entire generation from their birthright to dance, 33 years since the script first aired, are the grown-ups still making the same mistakes?

It's not a question that this production tries to answer, but young and old alike we could all use for a night of footloose and fancy free fun and foot-stomping, and this is just the ticket.

Vince Cable urges young voters to register

Commenting on figures published by the Electoral Reform Society, whose analysis shows the number of school leavers on the electoral roll has dropped by more than a quarter in three years, Vince Cable, the Liberal Democrat Parliamentary candidate for Twickenham said:

“Young people’s wishes have been swept under the rug since the EU referendum when 75% voted to remain. At a time of monumental political change, many feel hurt, ignored and powerless. That isn’t right and it is vital that the voice of young people is heard at the General Election.

“It is has never been more important to vote, but to do so you have to be on the electoral register. My message is quite simple. I obviously hope the people of Twickenham vote for me, but most importantly it is vital that everyone has the chance to vote.

“If you haven’t voted before. If you are new to Twickenham. If you have recently moved house, or if you live in a private rented accommodation, then I would urge to check whether you are on the electoral register. If you are not you have just a few days to do so.”

Chestnut Sunday

Mark Merrington, Hampton Wick Society

Every year, on the Sunday closest to 11 May, crowds gather in Bushy Park to celebrate the blossom on the horse chestnut trees. This year, Chestnut Sunday was on 14 May and was as successful as ever, helped by some fine weather following a rainy night.

As usual, the main event was the parade from Teddington Gate to the Diana Fountain, passing down Chestnut Avenue. There was the usual eclectic mixture of participants, including vintage cars and bicycles, military vehicles, horse rangers, marching bands, motorcyclists and taxis.

There was also a fairground with traditional galloping horse carousel as well as other rides and stalls. A brass band at one point played the Dambusters' March - a fitting accompaniment to the Hampton Wick Association's neighbouring exhibition on R C Sherriff (currently on display in Hampton Wick Library) who wrote the film screenplay. Many other local organisation also supported the event, notably the Teddington Society and the Friends of Bushy and Home Park.

Mark Merrington, Chairman of the Hampton Wick Association, said: "Chestnut Sunday is a major event in the local calendar. It was around forty years ago that the parade was reinstated by the late Colin Pain, a founding father of the Hampton Wick Association, and his wife, Mu - so we feel a very strong connection with it. It began as quite a small affair, with a walk down Chestnut Avenue and a picnic. Today, it is a major undertaking and we are greatly indebted to the Royal Parks, and particularly Bill Swann, for continuing to organise it."

NEW GUIDE FOR PADDLERS ON THE THAMES

'Paddlers' taking to the Thames have a new safety bible to turn to: the "Paddling Code" (Paddling on the Tideway – A Code of Practice for Paddling on the Tidal Thames) produced by the Port of London Authority (PLA), working with British Canoeing and several Thames based paddling organisations. The tidal Thames is 95 mile in length and is also known as the Tideway; it is home to 140 sporting clubs from which more than 19,000 people take part in water sports every year; it is also the UK's busiest inland waterway for passengers and freight. Sport enthusiasts take to the river for various sporting pursuits, including; sailing, rowing and paddle sports such as stand-up paddle boarding, kayaking, canoeing and dragon boat racing.

The 'Paddling Code' has been modelled on the success of the PLA 'Rowing Code' and brings together in a single guide, with easy to read graphics, all the essential safety information for regular and first time paddlers, covering trip preparation, equipment use, navigating on the river, tips for tricky sections of the Thames, and handling emergencies on the Tideway. Previously this safety guidance was spread across three separate publications.

Launching the new paddling code – Standing -Paul Hyman, Active 360, Russel Smith, British Canoeing, Darren Knight, PLA, Keven East, British Canoeing. Kneeling – Sarah Robinson, Active 360, Alex Hester, Chelsea Kayak Club

Darren Knight, PLA assistant harbour master recreational said:

“The Tidal Thames is a diverse water space with relatively calm waters in Richmond, to busy fast flowing sections in central London and out to an expansive estuary along the Kent and Essex coast. “We’ve developed the ‘Paddling Code’ to give paddlers all the information they need on how to enjoy the river safely in one place. This will give new paddlers the confidence to take to the Thames and plan their passages safely and provide seasoned paddlers new insight for taking on more challenging sections of the river.”

Ben Seal, British Canoeing places to paddle manager said:

“The Tideway is one of the leading venues for water sports in the UK, with thousands of people taking to the river to exercise, de-stress or take in the scenic riverside views. The Code is set to be a really valuable resource for paddlers, which will improve their safety and the safety of others on the river, but also help to make padding a more enjoyable experience.”

The Paddling Code is available online on the PLA website at: https://www.boatingonthethames.co.uk/assets/Paddling%20Code_Online_pages_.pdf. All recreational users of the Thames are encouraged to download the PLA Tidal Thames App which provides real time tidal information, a calendar of events, details of the latest river safety notices and mooring locations.

British Canoeing and the PLA will be launching the Paddling Code with a paddle and briefing session, which is open to paddlers and group leaders to attend on Saturday 17th June. For more information and to book a place visit:

TREACLE – A CAT LOST AND FOUND

By Katherine Farley

Accidents happen, there is no fault, no blame but my heart goes up into my throat every time I think about it. Treacle is a year old, he was due to have his booster injection and mum and dad took him to Sherwood Vets in Hampton while I decorated.

A phone call to say the cage had opened and he had got out broke my heart. I searched for hours that night. Calling, sobbing, I am sure people thought I was crazy. I posted on Facebook, nextdoor and twitter knowing I couldn't possibly cover the area on my own. A friend made posters for me as I don't have a printer and I covered the immediate area nearest the vets. I searched for hours at different times of the day and night and got to know most of the black cats in Hampton very well. One thing I noticed, all apart from one were collarless. Yes Treacle has a microchip but that only works if someone can get hold of a missing cat, either borrow a scanner or get to a vet.

Microchips do not have gps, there is no find my cat app for them, and explaining to people that he is a black cat - people don't see the facial characteristics the cute way the cat will snuggle up and paw at your face or follow you around. In short a black cat is a black cat. It is essential as a pet owner not only to have your pet microchipped but to keep those details up to date if you move, and I feel this very strongly to have a collar and disc on your pet.

The response from people has been overwhelming. Through various groups on Facebook I have received amazing support and kindness. People sending tweets, sharing posts, joining me to put up posters, meeting me to search and going out of their way to search on their own. I have to say pet owners are the loveliest people and I am so very grateful. I never doubted that Treacle would come home it was just a matter of time - I felt like I had let him down completely that I was failing him and not doing enough. Of all things it was social media that brought him home.

I received an email on the Friday evening from a lady in Kingswood Avenue. She had noticed a young black cat in the area. He was frightened hungry and very thin. On the Saturday early evening I received a call from this lady to say she had the cat in her utility room. So I drove straight over. It became a habit to go everywhere with a tin of tuna, sheba, dry food and a pet carrier (a new one!). There he was - I so hoped it would be Treacle but I didn't recognise him. He seemed so thin, every bone could be felt and he was crying non-stop.

I called him Treacle, and he cuddled right into my neck calmed down and alternated between purring nuzzling and crying. He was so hungry, I fed him and he was still crying for more.

I took him to the emergency vet in Molesey to be scanned. When those numbers popped up I felt like I had won the lottery. He was mine and I could take him home. The vet was lovely, really sweet even when I burst into tears with a huge grin on my face and hugged her.

Treacle is even more loving than before. He is perfect. Our vet gave him the all clear (he is was just underweight) He has slept eaten purred cuddled up follow me around and settled back in so happily. I tell him all the time how much he is loved. I am incredibly grateful to everyone who has helped me, text, phoned, walked the streets, put up posters, shared posts, cared. I really am incredibly lucky.

As a thank you to the Twickenham lost and found page I donated 5 halo scanners, with the idea that these will speed up the process of reuniting pets with their families. My advice : please get your pets microchipped (keep details up to date) use collars with tags. Pre-register your pets on doglost.co.uk take plenty of photos so you have photographs just in case the worst happens

If your pet goes missing : register on doglost, petslocated, join Facebook groups, set up a group or page, keep posting, sharing, knock on doors, register with nextdoor.co.uk there are amazing people out there who genuinely care.. walk the streets (best time is early hours of the morning) - put posters up .

Keep looking and keep believing

May 2017 - Notice of work at Twickenham Station

Over the next few weeks our presence on site will become more prominent. Initial site accommodation, including temporary cabins, will be installed in the car park. This will reduce the number of parking bays available.

Work on a temporary ticket office will also start shortly, this will be sited on the current event day gate. Initial work will include clearing this area. We will also continue our trackside work – relocating cables and location box installations. There will be no other impacts on access to the station at this time

Junction of Mary's Terrace and Beauchamp Road

We will also be erecting some fencing in and around Mary's Terrace. This will be in readiness for the widening works scheduled to take place in July.

The widening works of Mary's Terrace are limited to the bend at the top of the terrace, on the junction with Beauchamp Road. This is in order to provide better access for emergency services and refuse lorries.
